The Pioneers of the New World

The first chapter of this fossil saga begins with the arrival of the Paleo-Indians, the trailblazing ancestors who crossed the unforgiving Bering Land Bridge some 13,000 years ago. These intrepid explorers left behind a legacy of distinctive Clovis points, enigmatic tools that have become synonymous with their presence across the continent.

Following in the footsteps of the Clovis came the Folsom Tradition, another group of skilled hunters who refined spear-making techniques. Their meticulous approach to crafting fluted points, expertly crafted for maximum efficiency, showcased their exceptional ingenuity and adaptability.
