Keller's education began at the age of seven, when she was introduced to Anne Sullivan, a young teacher who became her lifelong companion and mentor. Sullivan taught Keller how to communicate using sign language, and she also helped her to develop a keen sense of touch and smell.

In 1896, Keller enrolled at the Perkins School for the Blind in Boston. There, she began to write her autobiography, "The Story of My Life." The book was published in 1903 and was a huge success. It has since been translated into more than 50 languages.

After graduating from Perkins, Keller continued her education at Radcliffe College. She graduated in 1904 with a degree in philosophy.

Keller spent the rest of her life traveling the world, giving lectures on disability and social justice. She also worked with the American Foundation for the Blind and the American Civil Liberties Union.

Keller was a strong advocate for the rights of people with disabilities. She believed that people with disabilities should be given the same opportunities as everyone else. She also spoke out against discrimination and prejudice.

Keller died in Easton, Connecticut, on June 1, 1968. She was 87 years old.

Helen Keller was an extraordinary woman who achieved great things despite her disabilities. She was an inspiration to millions of people around the world.
