Central to this approach is the concept of "emergence," which refers to the spontaneous and unpredictable ways in which patterns, solutions, and insights can arise from seemingly unrelated elements. By creating a safe and inclusive space, facilitators nurture this emergence, allowing for unexpected connections and transformative ideas to take shape.

Guiding Principles for Emergent Strategy Facilitation adrienne maree brown has identified a set of principles that underlie emergent strategy facilitation. These principles serve as guideposts for facilitators as they navigate the ever-shifting landscape of group dynamics and organizational change.

- Pattern Recognition: Paying attention to the subtle patterns and interconnectedness within the group.
- Cultivating Relationships: Fostering a deep sense of trust, respect, and collaboration among participants.
- Practicing Patience: Allowing time for ideas to emerge and for the group to collectively process information.
- Holding Space: Creating a safe and inclusive environment where diverse perspectives can be heard and valued.
- Facilitating Adaptation: Embracing change as an essential part of the process, and adapting the facilitation approach as needed.
